United States Admiralty Institutes Enquiry

U.S. Navy Holding Enquiry Into Tragic Fate of Mississippi's Officers and Men

All Danger of Further Explosions Now Removed From Battleship

A Second Explosion Was Dangerously Near Sinking Passenger Liner

SAN PEDRO, Calif., June 13.—The United States Navy to-day mourns its dead, three officers and 45 enlisted men, their lives snuffed out aboard the dreadnought Mississippi in the fleet's greatest peace time disaster, which brought a traffic climax to a week of sham-battles and target practice. Aboard the Hospital ship relief lay and dead and injured, victims of a premature explosion in the Mississippi's number 2 turret. Aboard the New Mexico, flagship of division four of the battle fleet, members of the naval board of inquiry prepared to open an investigation of the disaster. Aboard the Mississippi anchored outside the breakwater, officers and men watched the flame shattered turret where a 14 inch gun with an exploded charge jammed in the breech, meant that the danger of still another explosion had not passed. It was a flare-back from one of the guns that shot death in flames and poisonous gases back into the turret through its open breech. A second gun, breech locked, let loose in the harbour as the Mississippi steamed home with its dead and injured from the drill grounds and hurled a steel projectile dangerously near to an outbound passenger liner. Of the injured there were strangely few only eight being hurt and their injuries comparatively slight.

Mail Robbery Amounts to $100,000

CHICAGO, Ills., June 13.—A. E. Germer, Chief Post Office Inspector here, declared to-day the losses through the robbing of the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul express mail train here last night would not exceed $100,000. Previous estimates placed the loss of currency and securities stolen from forty mail pouches at from $100,000 to $200,000.

HOOVER WILL HEAD PARTY TO MONTREAL Program For Americans Inspecting St. Lawrence Power.

CORNWALL, Ont., June 5.—Mayor Harry W. Suetsinger, in correspondence with Charles B. Craig, executive secretary of the St. Lawrence commission of the United States at Washington, has received confirmation of the following arrangements. The commission headed by Herbert Hoover, composed of seventeen of the most prominent men in the United States, including their engineers, will arrive in Cornwall on the Canada Steamship Lines steamer, June 15. They will be met with autos and conveyed to the King George Hotel where luncheon will be served as guests of Cornwall municipality.

After lunch automobiles will convey the party to the head of Sheik Island to view the site of the dam, recommended by the last joint international waterways commission, and the site of the proposed power house. At 6 p.m. the visitors leave by the Alert for Stanley Island, where they dine, spend Sunday night and part of Monday, and later be taken by auto to Osgensburg where they will be the guests of Osgensburg Chamber of Commerce at a banquet June 16.

They will afterwards cross over to Prescott, to go by the Canadian National to Montreal, where they are to arrive on June 17 at 7 a.m. From Montreal it is the intention to motor and view the Lachine Cascade, Split Rock and Cedar Rapids.

SAN DIEGO, June 14.—While demonstrating how a revolver could have been used by defendant on trial in shooting case, Judge Sotomayer of Tijuana, Lower California Court, yesterday shot himself behind the left ear and died in an hour. Under the impression that the court attaches had removed cartridges from the revolver, Judge Sotomayer is said to have placed the muzzle of the revolver under his left ear and pulled the trigger.

PARIS, June 14.—Edouard Herriot, leader of the radical party and left bloc which was victorious in the recent parliamentary elections to-day, accepted the invitation of President Doumergue to form a ministry.

PARIS, June 14.—Premier Herriot expects to go to London Saturday next to confer with Mr. MacDonald, the British Prime Minister.

PARIS, June 14.—Confidence in M. Doumergue is the keynote of the morning press comments, even in those newspapers which opposed his election.

TORONTO, June 14.—German-made shoes are being imported into Canada at about half the cost of Canadian-made shoes, according to information given to a special committee of the Toronto City Council on unemployment, on the authority of Roy Weaver, manager of the Shoe

DUBLIN, June 13.—Professor Smiddy, Cork, has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary of the Irish Free State at Washington, it was announced in Dail Eireann today by Desmond Fitzgerald, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Doumergue is President of France

VERSAILLES, France, June 13.—Gaston Doumergue was to-day elected President of France by the ational Assembly here.

Manufacturers' Association of Canada. Mr. Weaver's letter as read to the committee by W. Varley, ran in part: "Last Fall approximately 33,000 pairs children's shoes, good quality leather, and well made in every respect, were imported into Montreal. There goods were purchased in Germany in equivalent of 50 to 52 cents per pair, duty of 30 per cent was assessed on valuation of 60 cents per pair. No dumping duty was applied. A Montreal manufacturer who saw these shoes, stated that he could not make similar shoes here for less than $1.25 per pair.

Millerand's Successor

VERSAILLES, June 13.—Gaston Doumergue, President of the Senate, to-day was elected President of the Republic of France in succession to Alexandre Millerand. The booming of a canon at half past four o'clock this afternoon announced the solution by the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies gathered together in National Assembly of one of the grave political crises arising from the May elections. Immediately after the election of the President, Frederic Francois Marsal tendered the resignation of his cabinet to M. Doumergue. The resignation was accepted but M. Doumergue requested the Premier to continue with the routine business until a new cabinet is formed. Edouard Herriot, leader of the Radical party, has been requested to form a new Ministry and undoubtedly will do so. M. Painleve proved a good loser. He was the first of the statesmen to give his successful opponent congratulations. M. Gaston Doumergue, the thirteenth President of France, has had a long career in public life, during which he has been Premier and has held a number of portfolios in various ministries. Born at Vignes Vives, August 1, 1863, he began the practice of law at Nimes in 1885 and several years later became a magistrate in Cochlin 'China. In 1893, he became a special Justice of the Peace in Algeria only to yield that position when he became a Deputy from Nimes during the same year. M. Doumergue became Minister for the Colonies in 1902 and held that post until 1905 when for a year he was Vice President of the Chamber, then successively he was Minister of Commerce, Minister of Public Instructions, Senator in 1910, Premier from 1913 to 1914, Foreign Minister the latter year, Colonial Minister again from 1914 until 1917 and finally President of the Senate in 1923.

CHAPTER II.

"Yes," said Jess quietly, but with a natural little tremor of excitement. "We must go in to them. Father, I hope I shan't do anything wrong, or—commit a breach of etiquette."

"I'm not afraid of your doing that," he said, with a quiet smile. "You have only to be civil, and give them a cup of tea."

Jess put up her hands and smoothed her softly ruffled hair with the familiar feminine gesture, and then they went in.

The dean was a comfortable, good-natured cleric who was quite content to be ruled by his wife. He was an easy-going body, fond of his glass of port, and a lover of whist, and as long as he got these he was quite satisfied with the plan of life. Mrs. Burgess was a fussy, well-intentioned woman, who prided herself on her knowledge of the world—which was very small—and the way in which she managed her husband. She was the greatest gossip in the place, and took every one under her protection and patronage who would submit to be ruled and guided by her supernal wisdom.

When she had said to the dean, "Dean,"—she always called him Dean—"I really think it is our duty to call upon the Newtons; Mr. Newton looks a remarkably gentlemanly man, and the girl seems to be a very quiet and modest young lady; and I'm told they are fabulously rich; I should think Mr. Newton would subscribe handsomely to the cathedral restoration fund"—the dean only smiled, and wagged his head submissively.

He always did what his wife told him; always went where she led him. In this case the obedience was of the willing kind, for he had taken a fancy to Mr. Newton, and Jess, with her beauty and her simple girlishness, had interested and impressed him. So here they were.

Mrs. Burgess rose, and shook hands with Jess, and scanned her critically and with gracious approval. Jess looked remarkably pretty in her afternoon dress, with a faint flush on her usually pale face, and with her lashes rather timidly sweeping her cheek.

"We have been going to call for so long, Miss Newton," said Mrs. Burgess; "but y time is very much occupied, and the dean, as you are no doubt aware, is an extremely busy man. I hope you like Ravenhurst; it is not a very gay place, but it is may 31 very beautiful and very healthy. And I am not sure that gaiety is a particularly good thing."

"I don't know," said Jess in her straightforward way. "I have never had any; I've just left school."

"So I understand," said Mrs. Burgess. "You must be a great comfort to your father," she added, as she scanned Jess' costly afternoon dress, and wondered how much it had cost.

"You have a very beautiful place here," said Mrs. Burgess presently.

"Yes," said Jess.

"And I hope you will be happy here," added the good lady.

"I am quite happy," said Jess. "The country is beautiful—and I love the country. I've spent all my life in London—and that is horrible."

"We must try and make you really ter of yours, Mr. Newton," he said.

Mr. Newton inclined his head. "I hope she will take to my wife. Mrs. Burgess is very fond of young girls. Shows her good taste." And he chuckled comfortably.

Mr. Newton inclined his head again. He was too much a man of the world to meet the dean more than a quarter of the way. The footman brought in the tea, and to Mrs. Burgess' surprise, Jess, young and inexperienced as she was, presided over the sacred teapot with perfect ease and serenity.

"I am afraid there is nothing much going on just now," said Mrs. Burgess. "Ah, yes! I forgot; there is the Orphan Society's Dance. That takes place in about a fortnight. It is held at this time of the year so as not to clash with the county ball, and that may come in the vacation. It is usually a very good dance, and I hope your father will take you. I will see that tickets are sent you."

Jess thanked her. "I don't know that we shall go," she said. "I don't know whether father cares for dancing or not."

Mrs. Burgess smiled. "But you do?"

"Oh, yes!" said Jess; "I used to enjoy the dancing lessons at school. Of course, I've never been to a ball, or even to the mildest kind of party."

"My dear child!" exclaimed Mrs. Burgess. "Then we shall seem quite gay to you. This dance is a very good one and everyone goes to it. It ranks next to the county ball."

"I hope father will go," said Jess.

Mrs. Burgess rose soon afterward, and Mr. Newton offered to show them round the garden. The dean had told him that he was fond of flowers—roses particularly. They went round the grounds, and the dean admired the flowers, and in his timid way, ventured to make several suggestions. These he made to Jess, who liked him better than she liked his wife.

With his stick the dean planned out the rosery, and Jess with her eager eyes promised to follow him.

"Nice people, my dear," he said as they got into the ramshackle pony carriage. "That girl is one of the most beautiful women I've ever seen; and her father seems a most gentlemanly man."

"Yes," assented Mrs. Burgess. "She is pretty enough, but she seems to have a will of her own, and to be rather independent. But she'll find her level, no doubt. I will ask our friends to call upon them. Did you mention the restoration fund?"

"I did not, my dear," he said guiltily.

"Well, I wish you had," said Mrs. Burgess; "I shall expect a handsome subscription from Mr. Newton."

"And I dare say you will get it, my dear," said the dean soothingly. "They seem to be immensely rich, and Mr. Newton appears to be very good-natured. I should ask him."

"Of course you'll leave it to me!" said Mrs. Burgess, with another sniff.

"My dear, I leave everything to you!" retorted the dean, with a comfortable chuckle.

you!" retorted the dean, with a comfortable chuckle.

The following day Mrs. Ponsoby brown called. She drove up in a stylish victoria with C-springs, and she was beautifully dressed, and in every way the opposite to the dean's wife. She was a blonde, with fluffy hair, which looked as if it had been received some assistance from the dyer's art; but her eyes were blue and full of half-languid mischief, and she laughed frequently but not un-musically. She began to make a fuss over Jess at starting, for she was very much struck by Jess' beauty, the perfect fit of her dress, and the evidence of wealth in and about the Grange.

"My dear Miss Newton," she said, as she leaned forward in the low lounge chair and smiled at Jess, "you and I have got to be great friends. My husband says that I'm like a child and that I take sudden fancies and dislikes, and I suppose it's true. One's husband ought to know all about one, oughtn't he? At any rate, I've taken a great fancy to you—I hope you don't mind my saying so?"

"Not at all," said Jess, with a faint smile.

"And I hope you will return my spontaneous affection," continued Mrs. Ponsoby Brown. "I really want to be great friends! Mr. Newton, do you think I shall spoil your daughter?" And she looked up at him as he stood beside the mistletoe, with an amused smile on his face.

"Jess is not easily spoiled," he said, very quietly.

"Now, I like the way you said that!" she exclaimed, letting her eyes rest upon him with dreamy satisfaction. "Most men would have made the usual foolish commonplace response; but you said just the right thing."

And you will come to see me soon, my dear? Come over to-morrow—yes, to-morrow. I shall be alone; my husband is going to do Frank to a political meeting at some place ten or twenty miles off. You know he is an ardent politician—Conservative, of course."

Mr. Newton smiled as she paused for breath.

"Yes, we know all about it, Mrs. de Ponsoby. I ought to say that I am a Radical."

"How delightful! My husband will be overjoyed, because he will have some one he can wrangle with about politics. You see, everybody here—who is anybody—is a Conservative. I often think it is very hard upon him; because I am quite sure all the fun of playing at politics lies in the squabbling and arguing."

"May I ask who Frank is?" asked Mr. Newton.

"He is my cousin—one of the Spelicans, you know."

"I'm afraid I don't know," said Mr. Newton.

"Of course, his name isn't Spelican—he's only a second cousin of mine—but Forde."

Jess began to look confused, and very much as if she were going to laugh; and Mrs. de Ponsoby nodded and smiled.

"You think me awfully vague, don't you? So I am. I never can explain things, you know. Anyway he is Frank Forde, and my second cousin; and he is a real good boy, and it is quite right that he should have the Forde Property. Just now he cares for nothing but sport—fishing and shooting, you know—and what he calls improving the property, but what Reginald calls 'pauperizing the people.' I hope you'll like him, Mr. Newton. I'm half inclined to think that Frank is a Radical like you, only he doesn't like to hurt Reginald's feelings by saying so. Is that half-past five? Good gracious! and I promised to call at the Mount! Good-by—good-by!"

She held Jess' hand, and beamed upon her with the dreamy eyes.

"You'll waive ceremony and etiquette and come over to-morrow?"

"A butterfly!" remarked Mr. Newton, with his cynical smile, as the smart victoria drove away. "What do you think of her?"

"I don't know, father," Jess said laughing. "She meant to be kind."

He walked away as he spoke, with his head drooped somewhat.

The Mount—Mr. de Ponsoby's place—was about a mile from the Grange, and Jess wanted to walk there on the following afternoon; but Mr. Newton shook his head.

"Better take a carriage, Jess," he said. "Go in state on your first visit; afterward—he smiled—"well, it will not matter."

"I always feel like the Lord mayor in his state coach," Jess said with a smile.

He looked at her thoughtfully.

"You have a right," he said. "Jess, you have admirable taste. Take the carriage, however, this afternoon."

People in this country will grow accustomed to these and other similar expressions when the American delegates begin to arrive for the International Advertising Convention,
which is to be held in the Conference Halls of the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, next July.

There will be about two thousand of them, and, to prevent any unnecessary misunderstanding, each visitor is being provided with a glossary of Anglo-American slang.

The idea originated with a half-facetious suggestion at a luncheon-party. An American who was present chanced to overhear it. Within a very few weeks the glossary had become an accepted fact all over the United States, and thousands of applications came pouring in to the Convention offices in London from intending visitors.

"This little guide," says the preface, "is not intended to be comprehensive, but perhaps a little instructive to both English and American."

"An Englishman rarely says, 'Fancy that,' although he frequently reiterates 'Really,' punctuated by an occasional, 'quite.'"

"Don't tell an Englishman you will buy him a drink. Ask him if he would care to have one. In either case he will probably say 'Yes.' If you are addressing a Scotsman, don't trouble to think."

A glance at the glossary affords
some idea of the conversational pitfalls that the American come to "give London the once-over" will have to face.

He may, for instance, find some little difficulty in convincing the British waiter that when he asks for a "high-ball," he really means a whiskey and soda; and one can picture the mild flutter of astonishment of the Englishman on being told to "shoot!"
—get on with what he has to say—
or to hear the guests at his tea-party described as "lounge-lizards."

"Cop," "Candy," "guy," "cracker," are all already familiar terms over here, but there is trouble in store for the first daring individual who refers to an Englishman as a "jane."

Some of the bright gems of the collection are:

Rant—small-sized person.
Pull down—earn.
Handout—charitable gift.
Derby—bowler hat.
Hobo—tramp.
Jeans—trousers.
Smooth guy—plausible fellow.
Hotel life will present by far the greatest difficulties for the American guest. Maitre d'hôtels are always referred to as "captains" in the State, a term that may at first be slightly resented over here. When an American wants pancakes he asks for "Flap-jacks," and "crackers" for biscuits.
The first visitor to ask the "bell-hop" (page-boy) to show him the "shoe-shine parlour" is likely, in his own words, to get the "frozen mitt."

Colour's Carnival.

All the victories of the War were not decided on the day of the great Armistice, and since then the commercial warfare has been rich in honours for the British producer. One of the greatest achievements has been in the world of dyes. The success of the British Dye Manufacturers stands out as vividly in the story of the last few years as their corner of the Wembley Exhibition stands out vividly in colour. It is said that competition is a good thing for business, but here it is proved that co-operation can lift an industry to the very apex of achievement. The British Dyers, in their corner of the vast grey stone Palace of industry, have set up a stall
so that Everyman might stop in passing and realise.

Visitors to the Exhibition should not pass this stand, which is very near the main entrance to the Palace of Industry. It does not set out to flaunt the virtues of any one firm.
Its slogan is unselfish and national—
"British Dyes." Above all its carnival of colour there is a sombre, black lump of coal on top of a golden pillar.
Here is a symbol of the importance of aniline dyes. The coal suddenly bursts into a glowing lump of colours, illuminated from within. It is thus that Everyman can realise that out of the lump of coal which he throws on the fire so disparagingly,
come the colours of the rainbow.
Perhaps the most interesting exhibit in the stall is a bottle set fittingly in a little wooden temple. This contains some of the actual mauve dye, discovered and produced by Professor William Henry Perkin in 1856. It was then that aniline dyes were in their cradle. The innocent little bottle is the starting point of the story of dyes.

And the story is well told in the stall!

But it isn't entirely a commercial story that this stall at the Exhibition tells! It is set in a Palace of sombre grey concrete, with great machines and stacks of produce. You come upon it suddenly—

"Innumerable of stains and splendid dyes."

As are the tiger-moth's damask
wings.

Blue, green, red, yellow, and all the other colours, in a hundred shades, dance before your eyes, in cotton, in silk, and satin. It comes on you with kaleidoscopic brilliance, just as the sun will sometimes flood the earth with sudden light after it has been veiled with a cloud.

The stall, as a thing of beauty, will delight every eye that is sensitive to colour. It is like a Brangwyn canvas come to life—a dress rehearsal for a Russian Ballet. Here is colour's carnival.

The dye manufacturer is a paradox.
It is by dying that he lives, and the more he dyes the better he lives, and the better for British trade, which, in this department has established a victory as conclusive in its way as those greater victories which made

Malaya's Model Mines.

The Malayan authorities are making free use of working models to display their industries at the British Empire Exhibition. By this method they will give a fascinating demonstration of mining in the Peninsula.

One of these models will represent the ancient tin mine known as Gunong Paku, out of which tin has been won for three hundred years.

The old as well as the new method of mining the ore will be shown.

Another mining model will show the various forms of obtaining ore peculiar to the Chinese, who have preserved ancient methods as well as adapted new ones. This model is being made on the lines of a famous miniature, built by Towkay Ng Hol, which was a feature of the Malay-Borneo Exhibition. There will also be an exhibition from the last tin mine in the world, the Pahang Consolidated.

Malaya possesses one colliery, and a working section of it show the costly seam and the method used for filling in the excavated parts with sand.

The Malayan potters at Wembley will be responsible for the production of China clay, rivaling the best that Cornwall can produce.

Australia Products.

The first month of the Exhibition ended it is interesting to note that no less than 75 tons of Australian apples have been sold in small bags in the Australian Pavilion. None but Australian butter is used in the various restaurants in the grounds at Wembley and 150 tons have been ordered for use at Wembley.

It is interesting to note that every menu on every restaurant table at the Exhibition bears the slogan
"Australian butter."

Three Centuries Of Furnishing.

The Style of 1924.

The furniture of the English homes of the last two hundred years has never been so wonderfully displayed
as in the "period" rooms in the Palace of Arts at Wembley.

Every age expresses itself in its furniture. The cave man's home was a perfect setting for his character.
King Arthur's stories were told within walls and among furniture in sympathy with their spirit. The Normans were almost mirrored in the houses and furniture of their time.
Perhaps, after all, it is not a devastating thing to say a man has no more brains than a chair leg, since men as great as the Chippendales and William Morris devoted their lives to designing them.

The rooms open with 1750, and for a moment we stand in the delicate and beautiful paneled chamber reflecting a period which is, possibly, more beautiful than any since. It was the day of the Chippendales, and Chippendale chairs fit delicately into the scheme. The furniture for this room has been lent by Mr. Henry Hirsch,
Mr. Leopold Hirsch, Major Aubrey
Fletcher, and Messrs. White, Allon &
Co. From one of the panels the Joshua Reynolds' portrait of Gertrude Baroness Dacre looks down with well-deserved approval upon one of the most pleasant rooms of the series.

From this room one passes into the possibly less pleasant, but very interesting chamber of 1815, the time of Waterloo, which shows the style of furniture followed after the last world war. One thinks of John Nash and Raeburn; of the Prince Regent, all of whose personalities are associated with something in the room. The furniture is from Mr. Edward Knob-lock's collection, and the room is dominated by an exquisite glass chandelier, with lights that fall kindly upon the original carpet owned by the Prince Regent at Carlton House. The walls are covered with woven silk,
with patterns that suggest the Italian influence which was so strong at that time. The brass sconces are very beautiful, and there is a model, made from a mutton bone, of the ship "Caledonia." This was made by French prisoners of war in Porchester Goal.
A copy of The Times for June 22nd, 1815, is on a reading stand, and a facsimile of a Beethoven Ms. reminds us of the great Master, who was hypnotising Europe with his genius at that time. A Raeburn portrait is on the wall, and the wall perfectly records the interesting, if less satisfying, period which followed the day of Reynolds and Chippendales.

From 1815 the story moves to 1852.
In the second quarter of the 19th century most people believed that all objects of utility were ugly by nature.
So are was applied, and everything was over-decorated. Thus came the Mid-Victorian age, which has been like a quicksand from which we are only just recovering. The astounding wallpaper, printed from the original blocks, chimney-pieces and wall ornaments are as Mid-Victorian as anything can be imagined. A gilt armchair lent by their Majesties the King and Queen, the actual gilt and inlaid table used by Queen Victoria, and Aubusson carpet, chairs and Minton
vases lent by Lord and Lady Methuen, and a table which was once owned by the late Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, are among the things which make this room a true mirror of the Victorian mood.

From the melodramatic colouring
and the design of the Mid-Victorian days, we pass to the quietening influence of William Morris, who came at the end of the Mid-Victorian days like a mute to the strings of a crudelyturned violin. Here is a room of the "pre-Raphaelite" movement, when William Morris and Philip Webb cast the gaudiness and gift of their fathers aside and invented the furniture tapestries and decorations which which were like a magnet, drawing the creative minds of the time back to a basis of clean simplicity. Glorious Morris tapestries lent by Mr. G. Jonides, and a Morris carpet give the room a subdued personality, into which the chairs, de Morgan pottery,
and Gimson cabinets melt contentedly. The Morris carpets and brass sconces are exquisite. From the quiet of this room one steps into 1924.

In the main, the 1924 rooms—a dining-room, a hall, and a bedroom—are a perfect representative of the best art of to-day. They leap clear of every bad influence which survived from the Mid-Victorian days, in spite of William Morris and his kinsmen.
The 1924 dining-room is dominated by

TO-MORROW IS MAGNA CHARTA DAY

At the request of the International Magna Charta Day Association, to-morrow, the 709th anniversary of the signing of the Great Charta, will be observed throughout the British Empire and the United States as Magna Charta Sunday.

The great heritage of the English speaking race may be considered as originating from that memorable occasion in 1215, when the Barons of England assembled at the island of Runnymede and compelled King John to agree over his signature to their demands for self-protection from tyranny and for the groundwork of those rights and principles which are the pride of the British race to-day.

The objects of the Magna Charta Association in the annual commemoration of Liberty Day (Magna Charta Day) are:

1. For the annual recognition by the English Speaking Nations of one day in common, but not a legal holiday, to be observed as a memorial of the great outstanding event in human liberty, the influence of which is felt in every nation.

2. To arouse the consciousness of our race everywhere to the necessity of holding more closely together and of permitting no enemy to sow seeds of trouble between us.

3. To set aside the dangerous influence of racialism in our midst by the corresponding growth of sound feeling in The Seven Nations, the United States, Canada, Newfoundland, the British Isles, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

4. This closer unity of purpose is exerting a profound influence for world peace which literally hangs upon the closest co-operation of the English Speaking Nations.

"America and Great Britain in Peace and Friendship Perpetual."—Lincoln.

"British and American Friendships is the greatest asset left to civilization to-day."—Walter Hines Page.

The greatest security for world peace is the growth of a better and common understanding between all sections of the race, who boasts of the Great Charta as the foundation of the liberties which they enjoy. The common commemoration of the momentous Runnymede gathering will help to make possible, year after year, a more secure peace and lasting international good will.

Mr. R. R. Wood, Principal of Bishop Field College, is the Newfoundland Executive Vice President of the International Magna Charta Day Association, and he is assisted by a committee of local gentlemen whose names have been previously published. We are informed that His Grace the Archbishop is also a member of the Newfoundland committee.

Notes and Comments

Mr. Noel, says Buxton, the British Minister for Agriculture:—"If we are equal in the sight of God, all the more should we be equal in the sight of each other."

Prohibition is condemned as a wrong method for combatting drunkenness by the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa, which holds that "wine is a gift of God which no one should desecrate." The Synod says: "The Scriptures allow the individual to abstain, as is seen in the case of the Rechabites and Romans XIV and First Corinthians VIII, but never mention Prohibition as we now see it."

There are no less than 400 interned prisoners of the Free State, and about 300 others have been tried and sentenced for offenses in connection with the revolt.

The Government has power to hold all these internees without trial till next February, but much pressure is being brought for the release of De Valera, Austin Stack and the other leaders as well as the rank and file.

An American paper says that the radio Sunday services have become so real to some men that when the announcement comes that the "offering will now be taken," they write a check and mail it to the pastor.

The Labour Party and the Trades Union Congress recently appointed a committee to investigate conditions at Wembley. These conditions are described as "a stultification of all that is best in British life."

Speaking of these matters, the London Daily Herald says:—"We ought to have shown our best side to our visitors attracted by this exhibition. Instead, we include prominently among the exhibits an illustration of the most sordid and most stupid aspect of capitalist enterprise."

It was a great misfortune that the management drifted entirely into the hands of business men and soldiers—one of whom was lucky to get his peerage before these unpleasant revelations were made. That must now be remedied as far as possible. Labour must take a hand and see fair play.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

Britain and Russia.

Detroit Free Press: Doubtless the British Prime Minister honestly looked forward to economic benefits to the British working classes when he made his overture to Moscow. If his calculations were exaggerated, the weary weeks and months of the London parley have served as a corrective to his estimate of what Russia can give the outside world at this time. The British experiment, made in the best of faith, albeit with an astute exercise of cautiousness, and certainly with abundant patience, is to be recommended as an object lesson to America's own misguided preachers of Russian recognition.

Man's Debt to Posterity.

London Daily Mail: All who resolutely think matters out will agree that the key to true idealism in politics is in the principle that the statesman is to seek, not "the greatest happiness of the greatest number," but "the highest happiness of the greatest number enduring through an indefinitely prolonged future." For this new principle (which is in fact as old as the Greeks) brings into life the eternal and abiding. When it is recognized, the sacrifices of the dead for their country are not meaningless (as they would be if only "the greatest happiness of the greatest number" were sought), but are seen to be acts of a great love which transcends life and raises it to the highest plane.

The Devil and the Deep Sea.

Singapore Free Press: Advice out by the mail indicate clearly that in coming to its decision on the Singapore Base Scheme, the Government was between the Devil and the Deep Sea—our readers can allocate these roles to whomsoever they choose. The Labor members of the rank and file could not stomach such an abrupt volte face as continuation, and the Conservatives and a good many Liberals would not think of agreeing to absolute abandonment. Hence the perfectly delightful exhibition of the British habit of compromising. The Government can not go on this year because they can't spare the money, but the Government has not definitely abandoned the scheme. Hence, perhaps, the continued Colonial acquisition of land on the northern side of the island.

Lending a Hand.

Adelaide Chronicle: To put it on its lowest ground, Australia is by sheer necessity a unit of the British Empire. No one would guarantee her ports and cities for a month after separation. It is the British Navy, and the British Navy alone, that secures her territorial autonomy, and to cut ourselves off from the protection of that navy would be a folly to ourselves and a crime as regards those who are to come after us. But though we are guaranteed from loss of territory and from serious or permanent invasion as long as Britain is an Empire and can employ her entire strength against an enemy, it is impossible to prevent raiding or attempts to raid. Steam and oil facilitate rapid movements, and the great steamers of today can readily carry and easily land large bodies of men. Our duty, therefore, is to establish such a measure

700 Barred Under Ruling on Kinfolk

(New York World.)

The recent ruling of the United States Supreme Court setting aside the immigration law interpretation which permitted a resident alien to bring his wife and children to the United States caused about 700 Italians, who arrived yesterday on the liner Dante Alighieri, to be held for examination today or tomorrow at Ellis Island.

When the Dante Alighieri left Genoa and Naples with the hopeful relatives, the decision of the court had not been made public. More than 1,000 Italians were at the pier at Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, when the liner docked. All were clamoring for a glimpse of their relatives and a squad of policemen were busy keeping order. Several policemen were placed on board the vessel to prevent the immigrants stealing their way ashore and to prevent disorder on board.

The Dante Alighieri carried fifty-one first cabin, 319 second and 738 third class passengers. At least 700 of the group will be sent to Ellis Island probably deported. There was much weeping on the pier and on shipboard when this became known. Of the group refused admission about 200 had been refused admission to of defense as would hold raiders in check until the British fleet, in their overwhelming might, could reach our waters.

Canada at Halifax, where the Dante Alighieri touched.

Before embarking at Italian ports the Canada-bound immigrants were informed that possession of $500 was necessary for them to enter the Dominion. Leaving Naples it was learned 1,200 was necessary.

The Italians scrawled comment of denunciatory nature about Canada and the British over the vessel.

Until the would-be immigrants are taken to Ellis Island, a close watch will be kept on the Dante Alighieri by the local police and immigration officials.

The kin of those on board remained near the liner until after dark last night, finally being dispersed by police.

The Son of His Father

He was a quaint little figure, dressed in a worn-out corduroy suit, much too large for him, with an old, shiny peaked engine driver's cap perched on his curly-headed head. Nine years old he was at the most.

Up and down he marched, very serious and important. One might have thought that he bore the whole responsibility for the railway on his little shoulders. Slowly the coaches rolled in, but the miniature stationmaster was unmoved. All he did was to walk up to the front of the train. Evidently he was waiting for the engine.

In a few moments the powerful monster backed in, and then Curly-head came to life.

He superintended the coupling of the tender to the front coach, and smiled graciously at the men who were doing the job. Then he climbed on the footplate, touching the starting handle very reverently, peeped into the firebox, and hung his cap on the rail at the side of the cab. Then he jumped down, stroked the engine's name-plate, and, bending down, fingered one of the huge driving wheels. Finally, just as the train was about to start, he reached up to the fireman, who handed him down his cap.

"All right," he asked the fireman.

"All correct, Driver Bill," was the reply. "Good-bye."

As the train steamed out, he stood there rigidly to attention, his eyes glistening with pride, his funny old cap at an angle on the back of his head.

One night I heard why he did these things.

"His father drove it," a porter explained to me. "He met with a nasty accident a few months since, and Billy—well, Billy is just seeing that the wheels go round properly till dad comes back."

26 Rum Graft True Bills

CHICAGO, May 29.—Twenty-six persons were indicted by the Federal Grand Jury today in connection with the removal from the Sibley Bond Warehouse several months ago on forged permits of 8,000 cases of liquor valued at more than $1,000,000.

Those indicted include Walter and Sheridan Clinin, stock and bond dealers and brothers of Col. John V. Clinin, former Assistant United States Attorney; Lieut. Michael Grady of the Chicago Detective Bureau, and Charles King, John Gibbons, William Smith and Thomas Martin, all members of Grady's squad.

The liquor was removed on permits to which the name of T. E. Howard, assistant to the chief of general prohibition agents, was alleged to have been forged.

The Haig Regatta

The Haig Regatta Committee put things over with a bang last night when final arrangements were made for the Regatta in honour of Earl Haig's visit.

The C.L.B., C.C.C. and Reid Nfld. Company's boat-houses are busy centres the past few days, getting the different races in trim for July 2nd. Last night many of the Regatta enthusiasts were seen keeping a keen eye on the different crews that were practising.

Tom Karsy was out coxswain in the Red Lion with a crew for the District Race, giving them a few tips. How about your own crew Tom?

Ed. Skiffington had his juvenile crew for a spin in the Mary. Ned says he is sure going to hook one of the gold match box holders.

The Amateur Race will be a thriller as Aubrey White has got a fine six and Jack Howlett had his College Amateur crew out for practice at an early hour yesterday morning.

The C.L.B. Highlanders and Cades, have entered for the ex-Brigade race. The Highlanders had a spin in the Red Lion Wednesday night and will have to be reckoned with on July 2nd.

We are told the prizes of gold and silver match box holders, given by Colonel Nangle, have been specially made for the Regatta and each holder will bear the signature of Earl Haig. A very appropriate souvenir of Earl Haig's visit.

One of the features of the Regatta will be the twelve oared race between the crews of the warships which will be in port for the Haig celebration. How about a crew to represent Newfoundland?

Another feature will be a log rolling competition between log drivers from Grand Falls and the Humber.

Capt. Pendlebury Reports Monkeys and Birds Populated the Trees on the Land.

Capt. Jonas Pendlebury, master of the Dollar Line steamship, President Adams, is known in every port for veracity. Recently he dropped anchor in New York harbour, after a round-the-world cruise, with the following story, which, he said, would be reported to the Hydrographic Office.

"The chart," he said, "put us in the Palawan Passage, off the southern end of the Island of Palawan, in the Philippines. We were supposed to have plenty of room. But, as sure as you're sitting there, dead ahead were eight floating islands, the largest more than seven acres in area. We checked with our instruments to make sure they moved."

"We passed one less than fifty feet to starboard. Coconut palms 100 feet high grew on the islands and thousands of monkeys, screeching and chattering, heaved coconuts at us. Brilliantly plumaged birds flared about the ship. It was a ticklish moment, the islands moving at us."

The Commander Evan sailed today from Nipper's Harbor, for Hull England, with 5,500 lbs of fresh salmon, consigned to Hudson Bros.

The schooner Faustina is now at Burgeo, loading 1000 quintals dry cod fish for Oporto from Henry Clement.

The Phylis L. Westhaven entered at Twillingate yesterday, coal laden, from Sydney.

Last Night's Game

The Cadets were the winners of last night's game, when they defeated the Star by a score of 6-0.

The night was ideal for football, there being no wind, and the atmosphere just cool enough to be comfortable for the players. A large number of fans turned up to see the game. The Cadets had their full team on and they showed up very well. The Star team consisted principally of new comers to the game, and for their first appearance, they did very well. In the past the Star team was always amongst the high fliers, but the players of these days are now "has beens" and must give place to the younger blood. This year's team may not reach the top this season but the material for champions is in the line-up and will in time be heard from. Before the superior play of the Cadet aggregation, the team did not have a chance, and so it was that each period saw three goals being scored. After about ten minutes of play Walter Callahan notched up No. 1 from a well placed corner. Shortly after this Billy Callahan was responsible for No. 2, and Walter again within another five minutes. The second half had not been long in progress when Walter Callahan again scored, followed by Flynn and Caul. The Cadets played a very good game throughout and their combination and individual work was much commented on. There was an absence of anything bordering on rough play. Mr. F. Brien was referee. The next game will be on Monday night when the C. L. B. and C. L. I. will face off.

WEDDING BELLS

ROBSON-JAMES

The marriage of Jeanne Christian, youngest daughter of the late Mr. John W. James and of Mrs. James, of this city, to Mr. Norman Robson, of New-castle-on-Tyne, England, was solemnized on Saturday evening, May 10th at the Verdun Methodist Church, Montreal. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. Williams, pastor of the church. The bride who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. H. James, wore a gown of white satin canton very simply draped at one side and finished with loopings of orange blossoms. Her tulle veil was arranged in cap effect, caught with orange blossoms, and she carried a shower-bouquet of white roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her sister, Mrs. Marion Brown, as matron of honor, wore a gown of co-oon-colored georgette with shoes and hat to match. Miss Catherine Robson, sister of the groom, as bridesmaid, wore a gown of peach-colored georgette with shoes and hat to match. Both carried bouquets of shaded sweet peas in pastel shades. The best man was Mr. Eddie McEnroe. The wedding March was played by Mr. Banton, the organist of the church. A reception followed the ceremony. Later Mr. and Mrs. Robson left on their wedding trip to the Laurentian Mountains.

Mrs. J. Glover, Cook's Street, is a sister of the bride, and Mr. S. M. James, Hamilton Avenue, a brother.

Mount Carmel Cemetery Committee

HOLD ANNUAL MEETING.
The annual meeting of the Mount Carmel Cemetery Committee was held last night, those present being Messrs. M. F. Caul, Chairman; John Dalton, P. Grace, Jas. McGrath, M. Cole, N. Callahan, D. Whittle and M. Dolger. Treasurer Dalton presented a statement of expenditures and receipts in connection with the Cemetery, which was passed unanimously. It showed that despite the fact that the actual earning power of the Committee is within fifty per cent of the amount necessary for the upkeep of the resting place of our beloved dead, yet through the strenuous efforts of the gentlemen appointed by His Grace Archbishop Roche, to conduct the affairs of the Cemetery they were able (through the generosity of those of our citizens whose loved ones are interred in the beautiful slopes of Mount Carmel) to liquidate in full the outstanding loan, and in addition to carry forward a small amount towards this year's upkeep. The Committee is to be congratulated upon the great work, which is done voluntarily,—but at the same time they are gratefully cognized of the deep interest which His Grace the Archbishop displays in the Cemetery, as well as of the whole-hearted enthusiasm of those of our citizens, both Catholic and Protestant, who are so keenly interested in the resting places of the dead. Without the tangible support and interest of citizens generally, it is appreciated that the efforts of the Committee would be futile.

It was noted that this year would be undertaken the completion of the retaining wall around the new ground by the lake side, but it view of the short time it was thought expedient that matters should be deferred until next year, especially in view of the fact that certain expenditures have to be immediately made in connection with the Mortuary Chapel forces, new walks, etc.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the election of Mr. M. F. Caul as Chairman, Mr. P. Grace as Secretary, and Mr. John Dalton as Treasurer, who this year again ask the whole-souled co-operation of all citizens in the upkeep of "The Garden of the Dead," as has been given in the past.

To Beautify Cemeteries

On to-morrow, Sunday, the Catholics of his City will be called upon to respond to the request published from the altars of the Churches, Sunday, that the annual collection for improving and beautifying Cemeteries be taken up at all Masses. Every effort should be made to make those sacred places beauty spots of the City. Hands of our most eminent people at the altar, and nearly every Catholic family is represented amongst those who slumber under the grassy sod. Much work has to be done by energetic Committees and Catholic graves have to be trimmed, mowed and fences put in order, walks paired off, and all this necessitates work which entails considerable expense will be a sufficient inspiration that a ready and hearty response will be given on Sunday at all Masses which will be sufficient enable the Committees to leave no undone towards the improvement and beautification of these venerable and sacred spots. We do not consider it necessary to dwell at length upon this important matter because the generous responses of Catholic people upon all occasions have been demonstrated, and we hope trust that the 1924 collection will record one and place in the hands those appointed to look after Cemeteries the necessary funds make our "Cities of the Dead" as in beauty to those elsewhere.
